¹ Programming figures are presented for individuals who served at least three years at DOCCS.

² One reason individuals may refuse copies of their birth certificates or social security cards is if they report that they have a copy at home.

³ The statistics refer to individuals returning to the community from incarceration for their original offense, rather than returning to the community from incarceration for a parole violation.

⁴ Returns for parole violations include returns associated with arrest, absconder and technical warrants. This data is only updated annually.

⁵ This data represents people released to supervision, and excludes those who transferred to supervision in another state, those who were deported, and those who were convicted out-of-state but are serving their post-release supervision term in New York.

⁶ This data is based on individuals living in the community under community supervision who were released from DOCCS facilities (excluding out-of-state, deportations, incarcerated, and absconders). Percentage represents those parolees who have been living continuously in the community for 6 months to less than 1 year whose current address is not a shelter, halfway house, hotel, motel, or housing placement.
